QUESTION 1 (25 MARKS)

KUALA LUMPUR, 22 September – Bank Negara Malaysia wishes to state that financial institutions will continue to lend to individuals who can afford to take on a housing loan, including for the purchases of their first homes. About 75 per cent of borrowers (approximately 1.5 million borrowers) with housing loans are first time house buyers.

Access to financing is not the main problem confronting potential buyers of affordable houses. The fundamental issues that require resolution are affordability and the shortage of supply of reasonably priced houses.

The implementation of Bank Negara Malaysia's responsible financing guidelines serves to protect individuals' interests so that they borrow within their capacity to repay the loans throughout its tenure. This is to prevent borrowers from falling into financial hardship due to excessive debt burden that may lead to foreclosures which will undermine the objective of house ownership.

Financial institutions are responsible to establish that borrower's income after statutory deductions, expenditure on necessities and all other obligations are able to meet debt repayments. This is to ensure that borrowers can continue to service the loan and have sufficient financial buffers for living expenses and deal with any future increase in financing rates and rising costs.

The maximum housing loan tenure of 35 years is more than sufficient for borrowers to settle their housing loans by their retirement age. For example, if the housing loan is offered when the borrower is 25 years old, a financing tenure of 35 years would extend to the retirement age of 60 years old.
